Excerpt: . . . page, in 1860, and was able after long efforts to read nearly all the first column, with the top half and a few words here and there down the second column. His copy is printed in an Appendix. See also Ny Felags-rit, r861. He was able for the first time to fix the place of one of the two quotations in Edda from the lost part of the Song, and to make corrections in the previous copies. What is left of the poem can only be half of the whole, as can be seen from the plan, which begins with a Proem and Introductory (ll. 1-52) measure of speech in the assembly of men. I have brought the noble chiefs praise out of the abode of laughter my breast, so that he learnt it. The En-voy. Enjoy, O king, the Drink of Beag my song, as Bragi doth the eye, Wodens pledge, and the cauldron of tears. 71. A; or hlatra ham hrdor her ck gram, B, C. 73.
