At twelve o'clock Washington appeared on the colonnade of the City Hall, at the corner of Nassau and Wall streets, attended by his Cabinet and both Houses of Congress. In the presence of the hundred thousand freemen who thronged Wall, Nassau, and Broad streets, Chancellor Livingston read to the President the following oath: You do solemnly swear that you will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of your ability, Preserve, Protect, and Defend the Constitution Of The United States. Washington pronounced the words of the oath clearly and distinctly after the Chancellor, and closing his eyes, with his whole soul absorbed in the supplication, he added, So help me God and kissed the Bible lying before him. Chancellor Livingston then said to the multitude: It is done. Long Live George Washington President of the United States Then was uttered such a shout of united and consolidated freemen as was never before heard on earth. The nation from that day entered upon the path of prosperity, greatness, and happiness, without a parallel in the history of the Race. The idea of a special Providence controlling, and aiding, and cherishing this nation, had long pervaded the mind of Washington and other leading minds in this country. At the close of the Revolution, when Washington had taken leave of the army, and appeared before the Confederate Congress to return his commission, he closed his memorable address to that body by saying: I consider it...
